THE CAMPBELL PROGRAM

The administration of justice is an endemic and critical issue that confronts any free society. There are continual demands for more and better-trained law enforcement officers, court administrators, and correctional personnel.

Our curriculum is designed to provide you with the knowledge you will need to understand the institutions of the criminal justice process — police, courts, corrections — and the administration of justice. You will acquire an understanding of the various components of the formal criminal justice process, endemic and emerging issues in Criminal Justice, and many of the incongruities in the justice system. Additionally, you will be taught how to critically assess some of the major controversial issues in policing, courts, corrections, and administration.

You will study criminology, victimology, political policy analysis, research methods and other sociological tools used to measure and understand the etiology of crime, societies' response to crime, and policy issues in the administration of justice. This curriculum will lead you to reevaluate your views of justice, the criminal justice system, and society in general. Noted criminologist James Q. Wilson believes that "It may turn out that a free society cannot really prevent crime. Perhaps its causes are locked so deeply into the human personality, the intimate processes of family life, and the subtlest aspects of popular culture that coping is the best that we can hope for." Perhaps so, but our goal is to equip and prepare students so that they are on the cutting edge of the developments that have the best chance of "coping" with those challenges.

THE CAMPBELL APPROACH

At Campbell, we balance course instruction between theory and practice. We use a variety of approaches to give you the theoretical and practical framework you need, including labs, field trips, symposiums, and a required internship. A typical major class will have just 20 students; some have as little as 10, so there is an emphasis on careful discussion, analysis, and interaction.

THE CAMPBELL FACULTY

What sets Campbell's faculty apart from the others? Our faculty members comprise a wide range of expertise, teaching experience, and interests. Having earned multiple academic degrees, they have been well-schooled in the discipline. Additionally, they possess personal experience honed on the front lines — on the street, in the courtrooms, prisons, or juvenile centers. Plus the faculty is very involved in both regional and national groups related to this major.

We also charge ourselves with the responsibility of performing rigorous and thorough advisement of each student to ensure they get the courses and support needed to succeed.

Finally, the department sponsors a variety of different clubs, organizations, and/or honor societies to facilitate bringing our majors together professionally and socially.

The Campbell Student

We attract students who are analytical, motivated, and interested in pursuing careers in law enforcement, government, or private sector endeavors. Our criminal justice majors typically work for government agencies, private security firms, the North Carolina SBI, State Police, local police departments, and the Department of Corrections.

The Criminal Justice Administration program concentrates on the goal of developing competent professionals who can respond to the challenge of crime appropriately and ethically in any level of government..

Criminal Justice Administration: Bachelor of Arts

Requirements for a B.A. in Criminal Justice Administration (CIP 443.0103)

Students who wish to acquire a Bachelor of Arts in Criminal Justice must complete at least 45 credits in Criminal Justice courses, as well as Government 229, 230, 260 and 339 (CRIM 339). In addition, students must complete 24 hours of suggested electives in consultation with their advisor.

This curriculum is basically for those who wish to major in Criminal Justice without having the advantage of technical school background, or who may wish to strengthen their academic coursework with the possibility of graduate school in mind.

The Campbell Advantage

While there are a couple of schools in North Carolina that offer a Criminal Justice degree, the primary advantages for a Criminal Justice Administration major at Campbell University include: commitment to academic excellence and quality classroom instruction, a friendly campus where small classes encourage closer relationships among students and faculty, and a commitment to helping students develop an integrated Christian world view in their major. You will find our program is also unique in the way it...

- Emphasizes a method of critical thinking and judgment with realistic "hands on" learning.
- Supports you through a faculty that cares about the individual student and takes the time to see that you succeed.
- Commits itself throughout the entire university to quality liberal arts education, free enterprise, and our Christian Mission.
