The Campbell Program

This major is versatile enough to take many forms, and its study can be a solid foundation for many careers. We have four concentrations: Government, Pre-Law, International Studies, and Public Administration/ Public Policy.

You'll receive an exposure to essentials in each of the major aspects of this discipline, including:

- American government (federal, state, and local)
- Constitutional law
- International affairs (comparative foreign governments, regional studies, international relations, or American foreign policy)
International Political Economy
- Political thought
- Public policy and administration, and
- Political science methodology.

To supplement these areas of study, you'll also study micro and macro-economics and U.S. and European history, and you'll take a variety of electives related to your concentration. Our program culminates in one of several capstone seminars in government.

The Campbell Approach

Though this is a very popular major, the typical class size for upper level courses is just 20 students; several have less than 10. That leads to extensive discussion, a favorite activity of government majors.

To reinforce classroom work, we encourage overseas study and we arrange invaluable internships with local, state and federal governmental agencies, public service organizations, non-government agencies, and law/judicial offices.

This major will help you become aware of the value of a democratic society, the moral dimension of policy making, and the ethics of good character and leadership. Moreover, this major, in any of its forms, will help you develop reasoning skills appropriate for analyzing issues, conducting research, proposing and testing hypotheses, developing sound conclusions, and presenting the results of your investigations — skills that are all essential for advanced study, and today's job market.

The Campbell Faculty

In addition to their strong academic credentials, our faculty members are active around the state, region, and nation in professional groups. Their research has been presented in numerous forums and publications.

They are also strongly committed to recruiting and retaining good students. One way they do this is with a thorough and lengthy advisement program that will help ensure you get the courses and the support you need.

Another strength is our clubs and associations — including the College Democrats, College Republicans, North Carolina Student Legislature, P. Sigma Alpha Honor Society and Mock Trial team. Clubs provide a variety of professional, social, and leadership opportunities.

The Campbell Student

Some of our students know exactly what they want to do when they arrive; many don't. Our variety of concentrations — coupled with our internship program — provides enormous flexibility and assistance for choosing a field. Our variety of courses also makes it easy to obtain government minors or double majors. For example, a government-history double major is quite popular.

We want students who wish to acquire the skills to become leaders and decision-makers to design and guide our society toward an exciting and dynamic tomorrow.

About six out of ten of our majors immediately go on to graduate school, and half of that group enters law school. Another 25% plan to enter graduate school eventually.

Our graduates choose careers in the government arena, private sector, teaching, religion, and the military.

Government: Bachelor of Arts

Requirements for a Major in Government

Candidates for the major in government must, in addition to the General College Curriculum, complete with a "C" average or better at least 37 semester hours of government courses to include U.S. government and constitutional development, research methods, political thought, public policy and administration, international studies or comparative government, and a senior seminar. For specific course requirements, see the current Government Bulletin.

Requirements for a Minor in Government

Students pursuing a minor in government must complete, with a "C" average or better, 24 semester hours of government courses, including GOVT 229, GOVT 230, and one course from at least three of the following four areas: public policy and administration; international studies; political thought; or constitutional development.

Government

Pre-law with a Major in Government or History

Law schools want students who think rationally and logically, express themselves clearly and coherently in both oral and written form, possess a broad education in the liberal arts, and have specialized in an appropriate academic major. Campbell University's Department of Government, History, and Justice has a curriculum to aid students wishing to demonstrate such qualifications.

The program meets all of the college requirements for a bachelor of arts degree and gives the student a major in government (political science) or history. The program, which is broad enough to give students the specific courses needed to prepare them for the study of law, includes U.S. and British history, political thought, economics, accounting, data processing, logic, national and state government, speech, sociology, psychology, and constitutional history and law. To meet the foreign language requirements, pre-law students, though not required, are encouraged to take Latin.

While the program is broad and diverse, no one course alone is vital. It is the combination of courses that is important. For the specific courses required in this curriculum, students should consult with the chairman of the Department of Government and History and see the current Government Pre-law Bulletin.

Public Administration/Public Policy with a Major in Government

The program in Public Administration/Public Policy modifies the Government major by requiring that more of the required 37 semester hours of government courses focus on public policy and administration and that students complete an internship and GOVT 481 as the senior seminar. The program further strengthens the public administration focus by requiring students to use elective spaces to take courses in human resources management, financial and organizational management, public speaking, public relations, and business. For specific courses, see the current Public Administration Bulletin.

International Studies with a Major in Government or History

The program in International Studies adapts the Government major by requiring that more of the required 37 semester hours of government or history courses focus on U.S. foreign policy, comparative foreign governments, international relations, and area studies and that students complete GOVT 481 (Government) or HIST 451 (History) as the senior seminar. In addition, the program uses elective spaces to give students additional work in foreign languages, international economics, and comparative economic systems. For specific courses and a curriculum guide, see the International Studies brochure.

A Double Major in Government and History

Along with guidelines set forth in the University catalog in the Chapter entitled "Academic Program and Regulations", students wanting to major in both Government and History must meet the additional requirements of: (1) maintaining a 3.0 average and (2) taking the Seminar for Government majors, and possibly an additional seminar depending on the adopted curriculum (See your adviser).

The Campbell Advantage
