THE CAMPBELL PROGRAM

Students interested in studying law are frequently surprised to learn how many choices they have when it comes to selecting a major. In fact, few law schools require a specific field of study, so at Campbell we encourage you to major in any area that can enhance your analytical, reasoning, and communication skills.

Law schools look for students who can view a problem from a variety of angles, weigh options, choose effective solutions, and communicate those solutions. Our strong liberal arts curriculum, complemented by any of several majors, can help develop the skills you need. Our students have attended some of the nation's most prestigious law schools, including Campbell's own Norman Adrian Wiggins School of Law.

Campbell law alumni have consistently achieved the highest first-time passage rate of the North Carolina Bar Exam of any law school graduates in the state. Campbell pre-law majors also receive special consideration and priority in law school admission.

THE CAMPBELL APPROACH

Students with a Pre-Law concentration may major in any of the University's undergraduate programs within the College of Arts & Sciences, the Divinity School, the School of Business, or the School of Education. Traditionally, some of the most popular Pre-Law majors have been Economics, English, Political Science, History, and Trust and Wealth Management. However, students may also consider majors in other areas, such as science, art, music, communication studies, religion, etc. No matter what major you choose, our Pre-Law advisers will help you plan a course of study that will prepare you for law school admission.

This brochure provides a sampling of course requirements for Pre-Law students studying under one of the five traditional Pre-Law majors. We encourage you to also review separate departmental brochures for your intended major. The departmental brochures have detailed information about the major and also include individual course requirements.

THE CAMPBELL ADVANTAGE

Campbell's Pre-Law concentrations provide a solid preparation for the study of law. Our broad selection of courses combined with clubs, professional organizations, and personal advising form a superior foundation for advanced study.

You will also find Campbell is unique in our...

- Commitment to emphasizing the practical thinking and writing skills you'll need in a law career...
- Willingness to spend extra time with you outside of class in a variety of settings, and...
- Dedication to quality liberal arts education, free enterprise, and our Christian Mission.

For more information about our Pre-Law tracks in English, Government, History and Trust, please ask for the departmental brochures that interest you.

The departmental brochures contain program profiles and detailed course descriptions. Call the Admissions Office at 1-800-334-4111.

ECONOMICS PRE-LAW

The Economics/Pre-Law degree prepares students to pursue a graduate career in law, or graduate work in political science, graduate work in public policy, work in a think-tank, or work in private sector. This program provides students with a solid foundation in Economic theory and political science. It also provides a foundation for quantitative analysis, enhances a student's writing skills, and promotes institutions that support a civil society. This program provides students a more holistic sense of how various social institutions interact. Students who do not want a traditional Pre-Law curriculum have a program available to them that brings together the most rigorous disciplines in the social sciences.

This program will prepare students for law school in a pragmatic way. Economic logic is based on examining practical concerns and everyday issues. This program will offer all the same tools most Pre-Law majors offer. This will also help develop a broader and more well-rounded student who can engage in the larger policy debates that affect our world.

TRUST AND WEALTH MANAGEMENT PRE-LAW

A student interested in pursuing a career as an attorney practicing in the areas of corporate law, business planning, tax planning, or estate planning should consider majoring in Trust and Wealth Management Pre-Law. Consider the following:

- Campbell University has the only Trust and Wealth Management Program in the nation.
- The faculty (law school graduates in their own right) will help develop the analytical skills and technical expertise of the student by applying similar teaching methods as those used in law school.
- The student will be well grounded in the areas of contract law, property law, corporate law, tax law, employee benefits law, investments, financial planning, and estate planning. This preparation will prove invaluable in law school.
- 95% of the graduates of the Trust Program over the last 20 years (who chose to attend law school) have been accepted to law school.
- Graduates choosing not to pursue a career in law have any number of attractive trust and investment management related career options.
- Graduates are qualified to sit for the CFP™ examination administered by the IBCFP and earn the CFP™ designation. This gives the graduate the additional option of pursuing a career as a financial planner.

The Trust and Wealth Management Program was founded in 1968. We offer executive level continuing education programs to the trust industry nationwide. The contacts made through these programs have resulted in over 90% of our students choosing to pursue a career in Trust and Wealth Management being placed prior to graduation. The Trust Program has ongoing relationships with Bank of America, BB&T, Mellon, First Citizens Bank, Wells Fargo, National Citibank, and SunTrust. Trust majors have the opportunity to participate in internships with the above institutions in New York, Seattle, Miami, Dallas, Los Angeles, Atlanta, or Pittsburgh just to name a few locations.

ENGLISH PRE-LAW

Please refer to the University catalog for the common core curriculum required for this major.

English is a rigorous liberal arts major. It requires a passion beyond the norm to read and think. Our students are thoughtful, bright, and independent minded; they also garner much more than their share of academic honors.

In a world in which employers worry that graduates will not (or can not) think, the English major requires that you see the importance of ideas to society and to your own life. Our curriculum insists that you make judgments, explore them, articulate them and, through this articulation, convince others of your position. English/Pre-Law concentrates heavily on writing, an essential skill for law school and lawyers.

- Students will explore questions such as:
- Where did our society get its ideas
- How have people in other times dealt with difficult issues?
- How can we use the English language to explore and communicate our own ideas?

These questions are deeply relevant to the legal profession, and they are some of the questions that English majors try to answer through the study of literature and rhetoric.

The English Pre-Law Track is designed to give students a broad knowledge of English and American literature, with special attention to the ideas, questions, and problems that have shaped our modern world.

English Pre-Law majors take courses that give them a technical knowledge of how to use the English language, how to construct arguments, how to analyze texts, and how to develop their own prose styles.

Besides our regular curriculum, we offer many opportunities for informal learning through the Mabel Powell English Club, the Sigma Tau Delta Honor Society, and the Dialogue of University Women. Our literary magazine, The Lyricist, sponsors an annual literary competition that draws entries from all parts of North Carolina.

HISTORY

As a Campbell Pre-Law History major you'll become familiar with the concerns, methods, and sources of intellectual, political, military, diplomatic, legal, economic, social, and religious history. And you'll complete a research seminar that provides basic insights into historiography, enhances reasoning skills, and introduces the technique of advanced historical investigation and writing.

Our approach is to make history relevant from both a global and a personal perspective. From your studies, you'll likely develop a more sophisticated understanding of causation; a sense of both the constancy of change and the present's link with the past; and an appreciation for both historical parallels and the uniqueness of each part of the past. Although most who enter law school do so as Government (political science) majors, History is known for developing in Pre-Law majors the insight into and understanding of common law necessary to produce firm legal mentality, and a foundation of fact and conceptually closely related to law. Our history professors cover all areas of the past and provide each student with an in-depth knowledge of human development, important to developing a legal intellect.

HISTORY AND POLITICAL SCIENCE PRE-LAW

Please refer to the University catalog for the common core curriculum required for this major.

Law schools want students who think rationally and logically, express themselves clearly and coherently in both oral and written form, possess a broad education in the liberal arts, and have specialized in an appropriate academic major. Campbell University's Department of History, Political Science, and Criminal Justice has a curriculum to aid students wishing to demonstrate such qualifications.

The program which has been in place for twenty years, meets all of the college requirements for a bachelor of arts degree and gives the student a major in Political Science or History. The program, which is narrow enough to give students the specific courses needed to prepare them for the study of law, yet broad enough to ensure acceptance of students to graduate schools or into a wide variety of jobs in the job market, includes U.S. and British history, political thought, economics, accounting, data processing, logic, national and state government, speech, sociology, psychology, and constitutional history and law.

For those interested in trial law, Campbell University has an award winning Mock Trial Team. Mock Trial competitions provide a realistic court environment. Students act as lawyers during a pre-trial conference, opening statements, direct and cross examination of witnesses, and closing arguments, while others act as witnesses. Practicing lawyers and judges preside, score, and comment on each student's performance. Sadly, surveys time and again show that even advanced students do not know significant elements of legal process or grasp the reasons behind them. The use of educational simulation of trial allows students to become involved, seeing the concepts at work in a situation which matters to them.

While the program is broad and diverse, no one course alone is vital. It is the combination of courses that is important. For the specific courses required in this curriculum, students should consult with the chairman of the Department of History, Political Science, and Criminal Justice.

POLITICAL SCIENCE

The Government (Political Science) Pre-Law program is the most popular way for students to move toward enrollment in law school. In fact, over 75% of law school graduates have undergraduate degrees in political science.

Though political science is a very popular major, the typical class size for upper-level courses is just 20 students; several have less than 10. That leads to extensive discussion, a favorite activity of political science majors. To reinforce classroom work, we encourage overseas study and we arrange invaluable internships with local, state and federal governmental agencies, public service organizations, non-government agencies, and law/judicial offices.

This major will help you become aware of the value of a democratic society, the moral dimension of policy making, and the ethics of good character and leadership. Moreover, this major, in any of its forms, will help you develop reasoning skills appropriate for analyzing issues, conducting research, proposing and testing hypotheses, developing sound conclusions, and presenting the results of your investigations — skills that are all essential for advanced study, and today's job market.

Our majors achieve the requirements of supporting all aspects of political science, from theory to policy making to international studies. Through a rigorous program of study, students who complete the Political Science Pre-Law concentration have little difficulty being accepted into law schools in North Carolina and across America.
